

A Level Sociology

Ofsted Outstanding Provider

Course Level: Level 3 | Campus: Stafford | Subject Type: Humanities & Social Sciences

Course Overview:

Dive into the complexities of human society with our A Level Sociology course. From analysing social norms to investigating social change, students explore the dynamics of human interaction and social institutions. Through discussions and case studies, students develop a deeper understanding of society and its impact on individuals.

What's Covered:

Ever wondered how we developed into the society we are today? Or why certain roles are 'gender-specific'? Sociology helps us to make sense of the society we live in and understand the cultural and identity issues which affect us all. On this course you will learn a number of skills including research and the use of evidence to support your arguments, fact investigation and critical thinking. Sociology is relevant to the society you live in, so you are bound to enjoy learning about topics that are relevant to everyday life; plus, it opens the door to a fantastic range of interesting careers.

Modules covered:

- Education with Theory and Research Methods: In this module we will cover educational reform; education policy linked to globalisation; functions of education; differential achievement by class and gender and ethnicity thinking about the links between sociological research methods via observation; questionnaires and interviews in relation to issues in education.
- Research Methods: We will explore different methods to collect data; including via observations, questionnaires, interviews, experiments, secondary sources and sampling techniques. We will also consider the practical, theoretical and ethical issues in research.
- Topics in Sociology: Topics covered will include; family and Households and the sociology of childhood, division of domestic labour, family diversity, functions of the family, demography and pattern of marriage and divorce.
- Belief and Society: In this module we will look closely at the function of religion, secularisation, religion and social change and religious organisations.
- Crime and Deviance with Theory and Methods: We will explore the functions of crime, crime prevention, punishment, green crime and state crime and the rise of globalisation of crime.
- Theory: In this topic we will research sociological theories e.g. Marxism, Functionalism and Feminism and discuss via debates topics such as sociology as a science, value freedom and social policy.

Throughout the course we will develop a range of research methods including how to collect data via methods such as observations, questionnaires, interviews, experiments, secondary sources and sampling techniques. We will also look at the practical, theoretical and ethical issues in research.

The course includes a wide variety of learning experiences such as lectures, one to one tutorials, ICT based tasks, practical work, group work, discussions and debates, use of media e.g. documentaries, and personal research when preparing for assessment.

Progression:

Studying Sociology provides an excellent general qualification for many careers. You will be able to use it to progress to Higher Education. Universities recognise the independence of thought and critical awareness that A Level Sociology courses develop. Many employers appreciate the skills and knowledge that Sociology students will have gained during their studies. On a personal level, students will find that their awareness of sociological themes enhances their understanding of society and institutions and will consequently gain a unique and fascinating insight into their own lives.

There are a wide range of undergraduate degrees available in Sociology both locally and further afield. Both Staffordshire University and Keele University currently offer Sociology options. Sociology can be combined with many other subjects, for example Modern Languages which is a good idea if you wish to work outside the UK in the future. The sort of jobs Sociology graduates go on to do are wide ranging including teaching, social work, work within the criminal justice system, work within the health service, human resources, journalism, marketing and business and many more.

What else do I need to know?

As part of your course in Sociology you will be offered the chance to go on several educational visits including a trip to New York, which includes many new cultural experiences including a tour of the United Nations. There are also taster day visits to a number of Universities' Sociology departments in the last term of the first year.

Think of what you're capable of. Then think beyond it.

Step up to a top university or move into a competitive programme like Medicine or Law with our Honours Programme. Perfect for ambitious and high-achieving students.

The Honours Programme is an additional pathway for students whose aspirations are to progress onto highly competitive courses at top universities, such as those in the Russell Group. Once accepted onto the programme, you'll be expected to commit extra time every week to this intensive support pathway.
